Introduction

The Protective Order Assistance Partnership (POAP) operates using a co-located service model that applies a short-term crisis intervention approach. Crisis intervention services are often the survivor's first contact with domestic violence and/or sexual assault resources and services. Appropriate referrals may result in the client seeking additional supportive services such as shelter, support groups, or counseling. The primary goal is to respond to the survivor's immediate needs in the aftermath of a crisis event, improve their ability to manage trauma, and help make connections with appropriate long-term services and resources (Macy and Ermentrout, 2009).

A critical component of assisting a patron in the POAP office is safety planning. A protective order does not always guarantee safety for victims, nor does it guarantee an easy transition from an unsafe situation to a safe one. However, research has shown that when victims have control over their own strategies for addressing DV situations, they tend to have better outcomes.

Safety planning provides the opportunity to make referrals and connect clients with POAP's partners and other community resources which are tailored to their unique needs. This could range from housing and food to legal services or help with addiction. No client's situation will be the same; therefore, the resources you provide will most likely vary with each client. Clients themselves hold the most knowledge of their own situations and needs and while there will likely be a few resources you will provide to most clients, such as Middle Way House, the Maurer School of Law's Protective Order Project (POP), and Counsel in the Court, it's important to tailor the resources you provide on an individualized basis. This enables the client to make informed decisions regarding their own lives by providing them with the information and resources that will be most useful to them. In addition to aiding the client in seeking safety, POAP wants to empower victims of domestic violence, stalking, and sexual assault and providing information and knowledge about resources helps in doing so.

In the following pages you will find a variety of community resources for the Bloomington area. The information provided includes the organization's mission statement, the hours and addresses to most resources, and any applicable fees or waitlists. The goal is to allow the client to be as informed as possible about the resources we are connecting them with. All information provided to patrons should be clearly printed and carefully reviewed. It is important for the individual to be informed of and have some sense of the process involved in accessing services. Because crisis and trauma impact an individual's ability to concentrate and short-term memory can be affected, the POA should review next steps with the client before they leave our office (Dass-Brailsford, 2007).

Alcoholics Anonymous

Alcoholics Anonymous is a fellowship of men and women who share their experience, strength and hope with each other that they may solve their common problem and help others to recover from alcoholism. The only requirement for membership is a desire to stop drinking. There are no dues or fees for AA membership; we are self-supporting through our own contributions. AA is not allied with any sect, denomination, politics, organization or institution; does not wish to engage in any controversy, neither endorses nor opposes any causes. Our primary purpose is to stay sober and help other alcoholics to achieve sobriety.
